

Sacred Kingfisher

Recently sighted in August of 2011 in Chillagoe Far North Queensland is a Sacred Kingfisher that has a genetic mutation called melanism. This means it has excess levels of melanin in its feathers causing the plumage to darken and make the bird appear black all over. This is quite a contrast to its usual brightly coloured plumage.

